The screenshot displays the PTVS (Debugging) interface in Microsoft Visual Studio. The main editor shows C++ code for a module named 'natmod'. The code includes a header 'stdafx.h' and defines several static functions: 'natmod_callback', 'natmod_debug_break', and a 'dummy_struct'. The 'natmod_callback' function calls 'PyObject_CallObject'. The 'natmod_debug_break' function checks for a debugger and calls 'debugbreak()'. The 'dummy_struct' and 'natmod_NatObjObject' structures are also defined.

The Python code on the right shows a series of interactive commands in a Python 64-bit 2.7 Interactive shell:

```
In [1]: t = np.arange(0.0, 1.01, 0.01)
In [2]: s = np.sin(2*2*np.pi*t)
In [3]: plt.fill(t, s*np.exp(-5*t))
Out[5]: [<matplotlib.patches.Polygon
0x92621d0>]
In [6]:
```

The bottom of the screenshot shows the 'Locals' and 'Call Stack' windows. The 'Locals' window displays variables like 'self', 'ob_refcnt', and 'ob_type'. The 'Call Stack' window shows the current execution context, including 'test.py:python_called_from_native Line 144' and 'natmod.pyd:natmod_callback(object * self, PyObject * arg) Line 4'.
